

Make sure an investment is consistent with your needs and fits your plan.

Be sure that any investment presented to you meets your objectives. Before you put your money on the line, consider whether the investment makes sense for your age, long-term goals, liquidity needs, and tolerance for risk. If you don't understand what you are being sold, get professional advice from a CPA or don't make the purchase.

Don't believe everything you hear.

Bad information and false news reports are plentiful. Before you act on information from neighbors, friends, or an unknown Internet source, verify the facts by visiting the company's website or contacting its investor relations department.

Stay in charge of your money.

This is vital if you want to protect your financial future. Seek advice from a trusted financial advisor, such as your CPA, in developing an investment strategy that addresses your unique needs. Then, be sure to monitor your investments' performance regularly. Vigilance is one of the most effective ways to protect yourself against fraud.

If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

PICPA, with more than 21,000 members, advocates to strengthen the accounting profession and serve the public interest.

To find out more, contact:

A national effort of the AICPA and state CPA societies to improve Americans' financial knowledge. Visit www.360financialliteracy.org.

Protecting Your Investments From Fraud

Printed in 2011 7225/11

Scams attract unknowing investors with promises of huge profits in a short period of time. Here are eight tips from CPAs to help protect you against fraudulent investment schemes.

“I just picked my investments. Now, how do I keep them safe?”

Know the person you are dealing with.

Don't let appearances fool you. Fraudulent promoters often create the illusion of a successful business by renting office space, printing slick promotional materials, and issuing stock certificates. Never invest with an unfamiliar company until you've checked the Securities and Exchange Commission's EDGAR database (www.sec.gov) or your state's securities regulator to make sure the company is properly registered or legally exempt from registration. In Pennsylvania, visit the Pennsylvania Securities Commission (www.psc.state.pa.us). Before you sign up with a broker, investigate his or her background by contacting the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA). You can call its toll-free hotline at (800) 289-9999, or visit www.finra.org for information. Be wary of any references provided by an unsolicited promoter. The person touting the investment could be a company insider or paid promoter hired to tell you that the firm's investments brought him or her enormous wealth. Also, question any high-profile names a promoter claims have come aboard. Even high-profile investors have been swindled.

Use caution when investing over the Internet.

The Internet can be an excellent resource for investors—but it also can be dangerous. The Internet makes it easy for scammers to make their messages look credible. Without spending much time or money, anyone can build a website, send thousands of spam e-mails, and publish an official-looking online investment newsletter. There are legitimate ways to buy stock over the Internet, but make sure you're dealing with a genuine business engaged in a legitimate business venture.

Be wary of high-pressure telemarketers.

Telemarketing is a legitimate way for businesses to contact potential customers, and this holds true for many investment firms as well. However, be wary of aggressive cold callers who tell you to “act now, before it's too late!” High-pressure pitches are often used to get you to buy an investment before you have had a chance to understand and research it. Chances are these individuals are trying to fill their own pockets with your money. The elderly should be particularly cautious. Some swindlers prey on older individuals.

Obtain written financial information.

Before you invest, always obtain written financial information about the investment, such as a prospectus, annual report, offering circular, and financial statements. Take the time to read and understand these documents thoroughly. If you don't understand the information, hire a CPA to help you make sense of the numbers and disclosures.